

Inhabitant:

"Unregulated building in the suburbs really started as a result of large speculations by landowners. But before this could occur, there was the wish of those in government to make Rome a big metropolis. People came from everywhere and not only from Italy. There was a great need for housing, and everybody tried to do what they could, where they could. First there were shacks, then people tried to improve them and turn them into little houses and so on."
